Ashley was a bright and ambitious young woman with a dream of attending law school. She had always been a good student, but she knew that the LSAT would be a challenge. She decided to take an LSAT prep course, but she quickly realized that it wasn't the right fit for her.

Ashley felt like the LSAT prep course was too structured and didn't allow her to learn in the way that she wanted to. She also found the classes to be too large and impersonal. She decided to quit the course and start studying for the LSAT on her own.

Ashley began by creating a study schedule that worked for her. She set aside specific times each day to study for the LSAT, and she made sure to stick to her schedule as much as possible. She also found a study partner who was also preparing for the LSAT, and they met regularly to quiz each other and discuss the material.

Ashley knew that the LSAT was a difficult test, but she was determined to do well. She worked hard and studied consistently, and she eventually achieved her goal of scoring in the 99th percentile on the LSAT.

Ashley's story is an inspiration to anyone who is preparing for the LSAT. It shows that it is possible to succeed on the LSAT without taking a prep course. With hard work and dedication, you can achieve your goals.
