A Passion for the Arts

From the outset, Rubini's vision for Rizzoli was to create a publishing house that would celebrate and promote the arts. He believed that art should be accessible to everyone, regardless of their background or socioeconomic status. To this end, he published high-quality books and magazines that showcased the work of talented artists, photographers, and designers.

Rubini's publications were known for their exquisite design and attention to detail. He collaborated with some of the most renowned artists and designers of the time, including Giorgio de Chirico, Fortunato Depero, and Alberto Magnelli. His books and magazines became collectors' items and were widely praised for their aesthetic appeal.

The Birth of Rizzoli

In 1925, Rubini founded Rizzoli in Milan, Italy. The publishing house quickly became one of the most influential in the world, known for its groundbreaking publications on art, architecture, design, and fashion. Rizzoli's success was due in large part to Rubini's visionary leadership and his unwavering commitment to quality.

Rubini's publishing house became a hub for artists, photographers, and designers. He provided a platform for emerging talent and helped to launch the careers of many successful artists. Rizzoli's publications were also instrumental in promoting Italian art and design on the international stage.

A Legacy of Innovation

Rubini was a pioneer in the publishing industry. He was one of the first publishers to use color photography in his books and magazines. He also experimented with new printing techniques and formats, pushing the boundaries of what was possible in print media.

Rubini's legacy continues to inspire publishers and artists alike. His passion for the arts and his commitment to quality have left a lasting mark on the publishing industry. Rizzoli remains one of the world's leading publishers of art, design, and fashion books.
