

My Next Husband Will Be Normal: An Adventure in St. John

I've always been a bit of a hopeless romantic. I believe in love at first sight, soul mates, and happily ever after. But after two failed marriages, I'm starting to think that maybe I'm just not meant to find true love.

So, I've decided to take a break from dating and focus on myself. I'm going to move to St. John, U.S. Virgin Islands, and start a new life. I'm going to hike, swim, and explore the island's hidden beaches. I'm going to meet new people and make new friends. And who knows, maybe I'll even meet the man of my dreams.

I arrived in St. John on a sunny afternoon in January. The island was everything I had imagined and more. The beaches were pristine, the water was crystal clear, and the people were friendly and welcoming.

I quickly settled into a routine. I would wake up each morning and go for a run on the beach. Then, I would spend the afternoon hiking or swimming. In the evenings, I would relax on my porch and watch the sunset.

I met a lot of interesting people during my time in St. John. I met a woman who had moved to the island after retiring from a successful career in finance. I met a couple who had been living on the island for over 20 years and had built their own sustainable home. I met a group of young people who were volunteering at a local school.

But despite all the amazing people I met, I couldn't seem to find a boyfriend. I went on a few dates, but none of them went anywhere. I started to think that maybe I was just meant to be alone.

One day, I was hiking in the rainforest when I came across a man sitting on a rock. He was reading a book and looked up as I approached.

"Hello," I said.

"Hi," he said. "I'm David."

"I'm Jane."

We talked for a while and quickly realized that we had a lot in common. We both loved to hike, swim, and explore. We both had a passion for travel and adventure.

I knew right away that David was different from any other man I had ever met. He was kind, intelligent, and funny. He was also handsome and had a great smile.

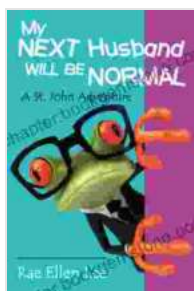

We started dating soon after that and quickly fell in love. David was everything I had ever wanted in a husband. He was kind, compassionate, and supportive. He made me laugh and he made me feel safe.

We were married a year later on a beautiful beach in St. John. It was the most perfect day of my life.

I'm so grateful that I decided to move to St. John. It was there that I found the love of my life. My next husband will be normal, but he's also the perfect man for me.
